

MSP Gains New Insights and Boosts Profitability

CUSTOMER STORY

THE PROBLEM //

The MSP was using a nationally-recognized network performance management platform, yet it was costly, too-often-inaccurate in its telemetry reporting, and lacked the integration capabilities most modern networked devices require.

Furthermore, there was not enough data available to get to the root cause of issues as quickly as possible. This combined with the fact that support was not always readily available, both for software issues and for general assistance, made the software less than ideal, to say the least.

To summarize, the MSP was overpaying for an overly bloated and inefficient solution.
